

Call for Applications

Resident Seminars on Religion & Violence

2018 - 2019 Academic Year

The Center Invites Research Proposals on Religion & Violence from Theology & Religious Studies, Peace & Conflict Studies, the Humanities & Social Sciences.

The relationship between religion and violence is complex and contested, raising a range of theological and interdisciplinary questions for the seminar. How are both terms defined, related, and deployed across disciplines? Are theological beliefs norms for nonviolence or implicated in violence? What resources do different religions offer for ending violent conflict? How is the violence in religious texts, histories, media, or practices to be interpreted? How can we identify and engage with religious factors in conflict situations? Can religions counteract gender-based and domestic violence? What role do local religious communities or the arts and religion play in resolving violent conflict? How is trust built and reconciliation achieved in interreligious conflicts? Are assumptions about religion and violence changing in the theory and practice of diplomacy, human rights, pacifism, or warfare? Applicants will welcome the opportunity to think together on such questions as members of our seminar in Princeton.

Apply online at ctinquiry.org by December 3, 2017

About the Center's Resident Seminars in Princeton, New Jersey

Fall Seminar - August to December 2018

Spring Seminar - January to May 2019

We convene resident seminars on global concerns. Members work in an ideal environment for thinking together on seminar questions. They enjoy adjacent offices, world-class libraries and rent-free furnished housing. They cover other costs, including living expenses and travel.

To learn more, go to ctinquiry.org • Email: apply@ctinquiry.org

Center of Theological Inquiry • Luce Hall, 50 Stockton Street, Princeton, NJ 08540